Co-Founder (with Susan J. Bradley), Infant Mental Health Promotion Project (IMP).

Chairman, Education Committee, Infant Mental Health Promotion Project

The Infant Mental Health Promotion Project is an organization of institutions and community agencies across Metropolitan Toronto that were first brought together in 1988 to work together to improve the mental health of infants. This initiative fits with priorities enunciated by the Division of Child Psychiatry and also by the Ministry of Health of Ontario for greater interagency collaboration and a focus on community development.

In 1989 the project produced a 167 page report of a needs assessment which took 18 months to complete entitled "Our Babies are Vulnerable: Report of the Infant Mental Health Promotion Project of Metropolitan Toronto". The project also produces a newsletter four times each year which is distributed widely within Metropolitan Toronto and across the country.

The Education Committee has been responsible for organizing community lecture series, courses and two major one day conferences each year for professionals, parents, foster parents and other caregivers on infant mental health issues, as well as a number of other special events and training opportunities.

Other committees have been responsible for contributions to medical education, public education, liaison with the legal profession, advocacy to government, and development of a public information system.
